Some visitors have come since childhood and others have just discovered the turn-of-the-century charm of Bayfield on the mainland and La Pointe on Madeline Island. One of 22 Apostle Islands, Madeline’s population ranges from 220 in the winter to 2,500 in the summer. Ferries cross from spring breakup until late winter with passengers on foot or with cars or bikes.

Bicycles, mopeds, and canoes can be rented on the island. When ice forms, some students cross by windsled to attend school in Bayfield until the ice road is passable by automobiles.

Madeline Island Museum chronicles Native American life, the fur trade and arrival of missionaries, 19th century fishing, logging, brownstone mining and maritime lore. A lively film gives voice to the past and a shop offers books, crafts, jewelry and gift items rooted in island history. The museum is opposite the Ferry Landing.

Madeleine Cadotte, island namesake, was daughter of Chief White Crane and married French fur trader Michael Cadotte. The island has been home to the Ojibwe for hundreds of years.

In 1659, the explorers and fur traders Grosseilliers and Radisson came to Chequamegon Bay and for 150 years, it was an outpost for French, British and American fur traders. After the Sault St. Marie locks were built in 1855, the area became home to many new settlers. Like people before them, they traveled by water. Passenger and freight ferries criss-crossed the Bay. As railways and roads improved, ferries – except those linking Bayfield and La Pointe – faded into history. Today, ferries run from March or April until freeze-up.

Dogs in cars or on a leash are welcome aboard the Ferry.
